Photography Walk in Fez

Atlas Emerald - Fez

See Morocco through the eyes of a local photographer. Photography is the art of modern times. According to the photographer, the most powerful way to use it is to "tell a story about people".

A passionate photographer and founder of the Fez International Artists Gathering, will share his aspiration with you: to create a space where local people can experiment freely with all forms of art.

"My dream is to give them an experience and make art more accessible, to open up their perspective and to show that art is not only a luxury, but could also have an educational approach," he declares.

The photographer sees photography as a "gift" that people can explore. "I hope people can take photography as a way of telling a story, helping people connect and reconnect, and as a way of appreciation, giving back to the world and expressing love."

All artists have moments when their muse decides to fall asleep.

"You fight a huge wave and you stick to that wood that is your only hope until the wave stops. If you do not have faith, I think your ideas will fall, ". He nuanced his point of view by saying, "It's all about passion, self-confidence and finding the right balance in our lives."

At first glance, Fez may not look especially kidfriendly. The maze of the medina with the tiny streets requires hauling strollers up and down and endless cultural monuments that seem daunting, especially for younger children. A Tea in the Sahara

Gold South

A tea, an aperitif in the dunes facing the sunset on top of a dune...

Stars Observation in the dunes

Gold South

The desert is not just another amazing nature scenery. Everything there is beyond standards, time and space. You feel confused emotions and the references become like dust or gold-like sand. Staring at the immensity of the erg, you understand you won't be able to control or tame anything, just like when facing the Ocean. You are just a very small grain of sand, going back to the essentials, without artifice.

On the trails in the South of Morocco, where camel trains used to carry silk, spices and gold...

When the Touareg songs resonate in the night, the sky wears its starry adornment. Time is standing still. The night...almost too silent. At dawn, after an unreal sunrise, the Blue Men picked a few dates. They are now waiting for you in a lush oasis.
